It was built by Fiat under license to Fiat Aviazione. Only three examples were built between 1957 and 1961. Design and development In 1956, the Italian Air Force ordered an advanced fighter with improved performance from Fiat, to replace the aging P-51 Mustang in service, which had been considered obsolete by 1955. On 24 January 1957, Fiat and Aeronautica Fabbrica (FAB) signed an agreement to build the F-111. The design was in part based on work done by engineer Giovanni Seggia, who was previously engaged by the Italian Air Force in 1951–1952 to investigate the possibilities of an advanced fighter. In 1951, he had also been involved in the development of the Fulmar fighter. The basic design of the Italia was very similar to the F-111A, with the exception of the engines. It had a delta wing design, the same as the "A", and it used the Rolls-Royce Avon as its engine. "Italia" is the Italian word for Italy, while F-111 is named after the F-111A, the first aircraft of the type. The first order for three examples was made in June 1957, and deliveries began in July 1958. As of July 1957, 66 Fiat Aviazione F-111s were on order; the first order had been financed by the Italian State, while additional orders were financed by airlines. In Italy, the F-111 was classified as a "medium" fighter, and was known as the F-111A, with the designation F.111. The "A" in F
