Zinc intake, biochemical and haematological parameters among pregnant women in Kolkata. A study was undertaken in New Town Kolkata among pregnant women to find out the zinc intake and biochemical profile during pregnancy. The study revealed an average daily zinc intake of 2.8 +/- 0.5 mg in pregnant women. The blood levels of zinc ranged between 9.24 +/- 0.8 and 22.05 +/- 2.0 mg%. Decreased levels of zinc were observed during the second and third trimester. Q: Carried Interest on Turnover I have a couple questions about the carried interest tax rules. Does the carried interest fall within the 10% tax rate? (I.e., is it a short term gain or a long term gain?) Does carried interest qualify as a long term capital gain (as it is no longer a part of the partnership and the basis switches to the value of the assets)? A: All of the following are 100% accurate. The carried interest is treated as a long term capital gain. There is no 10% tax imposed on the carried interest. What's New in the?

Q: How to read a json returned from a URL I am working on a ruby on rails project, i am parsing a URL which returns a json like this one: {"recent_stats":[{"stat_name":"XXX_sale_count","value":"0"}, {"stat_name":"XXX_order_count","value":"0"}]} I have been able to parse a basic json with this code response.read_body do |chunk| if chunk.respond_to? :each puts JSON.parse(chunk).each do |info| puts info.inspect puts info end end end But what i want is to read the value returned in the "stat_name" field (XXX_sale_count and XXX_order_count), all i found for this is to iterate through a hash like this raw_json = {"recent_stats":[{"stat_name":"XXX_sale_count","value":"0"}, {"stat_name":"XXX_order_count","value":"0"}]} stats = {} raw_json.each { |elem| stats[elem['stat_name']] = {'value' => elem['value']} } but maybe there is a better/easier solution for this, but i cant find any better solution. Thanks. A: I would suggest reading the JSON into a ruby hash using the JSON module like this: require 'json' your_json_string = "your_json_string" my_hash = JSON.parse(your_json_string) You then have your hash: my_hash.each do |elem| puts elem['stat_name'] end Low vaccination rate against varicella in Mainland China. Approximately 90% of children in Mainland China have been vaccinated against varicella. However, results of recent studies have shown that the vaccination rate is not as high as expected.
