Update: We received an update from Nintendo on our concerns, saying that the Brazil Nintendo Direct broadcast is still set for Friday November 3rd. You can always count on Nintendo to say a few things on the next Nintendo Direct, especially when it comes to the Switch, that in one way or another will impact the US release of the Switch worldwide. What is it that Nintendo wants to say, and why do we think they want to say it now? At the end of the September 2017 Nintendo Direct, Nintendo mentioned that they would show something on Switch during their November event, but what? Then we had rumors saying that Nintendo would show the Super Smash Bros game for Switch at their event in December, and since we had seen leaks of the code-named Switch game before, even with a different logo, that seemed unlikely to be the case. A logical bet would be a few new Mario Party games, either with NX features or just entirely new. Since there were rumors that Nintendo would soon be announcing a holiday season release for the Switch, we thought that Nintendo might be waiting for the holidays to release a new Mario Party game, either with more regions like America, Europe, Asia and Australia, or even more. We were wrong. In today's Nintendo Direct, Nintendo has said that the next Nintendo Direct will be from November 3rd, and we should know more about it then. Rumor Roundup Super Smash Bros Special Edition Switch, with NX Nintendo Direct now We're in the end of the day Our last story was that the new Mario Party game would be announced on the Nintendo Direct on November 3rd, with a December release, and this seems to be what Nintendo wants to say. Matching HLA-A and HLA-B haplotypes using the polymerase chain reaction. In some organ transplantation settings, it is important to know the HLA-A and HLA-B haplotype of donors and recipients before selecting donors and recipients. The A and B loci of HLA can be typed by conventional methods for class I HLA molecules. The B locus is typed by the combination of restriction fragment length polymorphisms (RFLPs) and/or simple sequence length polymorphisms (SSLP) in combination with Southern blot analysis or oligonucleotide probes. The A locus is typed by serologic typing, which is both expensive and time consuming. The polymerase chain reaction (PCR) is capable of suppressing a double image produced due to a double exposure in a case where a film is developed through two or more different processing solutions to form a negative image and a positive image. 2. Description of the Prior Art In a case where a film which is developed through two or more different processing solutions to form a negative image and a positive image is printed out by a printing method such as a letter press, plate making or the like, a double image may be produced due to the double exposure, that is, the negative image and the positive image may be mixed up in the printing process. In order to solve this problem, the prior art disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,606,482 (Re.33,786) comprises an image processing unit which stores an image signal input through an image pickup section and which outputs an image control signal on the basis of the image signal. The image control signal is used to control the quantity of the printing ink to be supplied to a printing device and the density of the image to be formed in the printing process. The image signal to be processed by the image processing unit is produced by scanning the negative and the positive films which are attached on a plate or the like through a flat-bed scanner. Then, the image control signal is set in accordance with the image signal, and thereby the double image is suppressed to a desired level. However, in the prior art, when the negative and positive films which have the same size as the scanning area of the image pickup section are attached on the same plate, the same image is stored in the image processing unit, and thus, the image control signal is determined on the basis of the double image produced in the scanning process. In this case, the degree of suppression of the double image can only be set in accordance with the ratio of the
