The abortive infection, induced by in vivo infection of Mässbilder guinea pigs with a temperature-sensitive mutant of the pseudorabies virus (Ts-22) was investigated. Electronmicroscopic examination of the infected animals revealed that an amount of about one hundredth of the amount of the inoculated virus was localized inside of the epidermal cells without causing morphological changes of the cells. However, these cells showed a certain amount of cytopathological changes during the incubation period of the infection. The degree of the cytopathological change was clearly affected by the amount of the inoculated virus. Ingredients: Steps: 1.
