Interaction between testosterone and progesterone receptors in cultured human granulosa cells. Interaction between the androgen receptor (AR) and progesterone receptors (PR) in cultured human granulosa cells was investigated. After different time exposure, no effect of androgen or progesterone was detected on PR mRNA levels in granulosa cells. Interestingly, AR mRNA was down-regulated by progesterone treatment. When the effect of progesterone on AR mRNA was analysed in the presence of antiandrogen, we observed that at the end of the treatment, AR mRNA levels were reduced by AR neutralization. In order to evaluate the relationship between AR and PR levels

In the past, there have been various devices and techniques to measure or otherwise attempt to determine the oxygen content of a fluid. Some of these have been of a general nature, e.g., that of a needle type, and others were in the nature of sensing coils or other such devices. The prior art devices and techniques have not been generally suitable in terms of accuracy, simplicity or cost. There has been a need for an accurate and reliable means of sensing oxygen content. These needs have been met by the present invention. The present invention is an oxygen sensing method and apparatus which are characterized by their simplicity, economy and dependability.
