The latest version of the commercial keystroke recorder has been released, and this time it's packed with many new and useful features, such as monitoring the overall traffic, analyzing and even reversing the operation of popular passwords in real time. After all, the continuous growth of IT systems has made password cracking easy and therefore vital for security managers. That's why even a simple typo can cause a serious problem, or even lead to the information leak of an entire organization. KEYMACRO's most significant change is the ability to monitor and reverse the operation of a large number of common passwords in real time. Of course, the process of reversing passwords is not exactly an easy task. For example, it's almost impossible to reverse a password that includes any of the following words: "123456," "password," or "12345". In addition, there are other strings which are rarely used, such as "123456789", "admins," or "God", all of which are used on a regular basis. KEYMACRO's latest version comes packed with several valuable features, including the ability to reverse passwords in real time. The truth is that this new tool is not only useful for the Internet, since it can also be used to monitor and reverse passwords in a local network. So, even if an employee leaves the office without shutting down his computer, the program will still function and monitor everything that happens on it. With this technique, you can easily monitor the traffic of all connected networks and detect all the passwords used, whether they are in an application, a website, a browser, or an operating system. You can also analyze the traffic in a convenient manner. In this version, you can monitor either your entire PC traffic, or only a specific process. Since this is a commercial software, it has a license. Although the license may seem a bit expensive, in fact, the version that you get is a lifetime license, since you can use it for personal use or even to sell it as a commercial product. On the other hand, in the new version, you have access to a rather useful feature that allows you to view a list of all the passwords that are used to access your online accounts, whether they are stored on a website, application, or email account. All the passwords have been filtered out from all types of traffic and can be reversed, so you will be able 77a5ca646e
