However, for those studying TEHCHEK: Technology in San Francisco, the Virtual Reality (VR) section is the best place to get a good feel for the industry. The VR technology is coming to the forefront with the development of many well-known VR-related companies such as Oculus Rift. Oculus Rift is the company that makes the virtual reality headset used by the Xbox One and PlayStation4. The technology is becoming more and more popular as many students worldwide are learning to code in VR. While in the VR setting, students can learn to code by programming games or development related applications, which allow them to see the effects of their programming quickly and more easily. Junior Nick Martino is studying TEHCHEK: Technology in San Francisco, in the Virtual Reality section of the TEHCHEK: Technology in San Francisco program. He said, "I have been learning to code using the Kinect for Xbox One with the help of my Oculus Rift. The VR technology is amazing, and I hope to create amazing things within it for the VR industry." Over the course of the school year, students will get an opportunity to work with firms to see if they are interested in the industry or if they just want to earn some money in the meantime. After receiving assignments, students need to work with these firms and give them feedback about their products. They also get to taste some of the fruits of their labor with a graduation party. TEHCHEK: Technology in San Francisco is an annual program that started in 2012. Students apply the same way as any other TEHCHEK: Technology in San Francisco student. They use the online application to fill out their requirements and apply, and the team selects them. Once accepted, the students start working on projects that interest them, and also attend class. Students throughout the program have the opportunity to 3da54e8ca3
