When it comes to calculating checksums, you can select one or more hash types from the list, along with a file, and immediately get its corresponding signatures in the dedicated box. What's more, you can resort to a random password generator by defining the key length (number of characters) and complexity (include or exclude uppercase or lowercase letters, numbers, and symbols). You can input plain data or encoded text (ANSI or Unicode), as well as securely erase files after specifying the number of passes (1, 7, or 35).
