It will also be the first FIFA game to feature a free-to-play model, with microtransactions for in-game items. The basic game will run you $14.99, with additional items being sold for $4.99. EA also announced today that its other mobile game “DragonVale” will be coming to North America on iOS and Android in September. The company also showed off some of the features of the title at its panel at E3: “DragonVale” comes with more than 50 episodes and a story mode. You can shop for costumes, train your dragons, and build up special powers. Certain items are only available in the game with certain dragons, and you can mix and match various dragons to create your own variety. The game also has a customization feature that lets you change the appearance of your dragon, create a custom avatar, and personalize your house with decorative items. “DragonVale” will be released in September in North America and will cost $3.99
