HORNE, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellants,v.COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY, et al., Defendants-Appellees. No. 86-1116. United States Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. May 14, 1987. Before WELLFORD and BOGGS, Circuit Judges; and PECK, Senior Circuit Judge. PER CURIAM. 1 Claimant Daniel P. Horne, one of six plaintiffs, has appealed the decision of the district court affirming the decision of the Appeals Council of the Social Security Administration denying compensation benefits under Title XVI of the Social Security Act. Following a long history of disability, Horne filed claims for social security benefits on October 1, 1982, and for supplemental security income benefits under Title XVI on January 23, 1984. Horne also filed applications with the Office of Hearings and Appeals on December 10, 1982, alleging that the Secretary had refused to reconsider his prior application for a period of disability and disability insurance benefits. He also filed with the Cleveland Regional Office of the Social Security Administration a second application for a period of disability and disability insurance benefits. Upon the denial of benefits, Horne pursued his administrative remedies by seeking review of the decisions by the Appeals Council for each of the claims. 2 On February 20, 1985, the Appeals Council for the Social Security Administration determined that Horne had retained residuals of a gunshot wound, but that such residuals did not prevent Horne from engaging in sedentary activity, and concluded that Horne was therefore not disabled at any time from which he has sought or received disability benefits. Horne then sought judicial review of the Appeals Council decision in the district court pursuant to 42 U.S.C. Sec. 405(g), and on May 20, 1985
