Why spend $1000 on an iPhone X in the new XS and XR range? Finding out why the iPhone XS and XR range is expensive. The iPhone XS and XR are the most expensive smartphones on the market, costing $1000 and $1120 respectively. The iPhone XS and XR have larger 5.8 and 6.5 inch OLED displays respectively. And unlike other phones, the iPhone XS and XR include many of the same features as the iPhone X. In fact many iPhone X features such as Face ID, Animoji, and the rear camera flash, have been moved to the XS and XR. The iPhone XS and XR have side mounted buttons. The iPhone XS has a fingerprint sensor at the rear while the XR has a fingerprint sensor and the front Home button. But the iPhone XS and XR phones are more expensive, as they include a lot more in the box for things like a better camera, wireless charging and the Apple wireless charging pad. The new phones also feature advanced augmented reality software like the A12X processor, which is three times faster than the iPhone 8. They also have the best processor from Qualcomm with the Snapdragon 845, which is said to be capable of 1 trillion operations per second. The iPhones have a new design with a glass back and Face ID, which replaced the fingerprint sensor used on the iPhone 7 and iPhone 7 Plus. Both phones have Apple's True Tone display which optimises the colour on the device. The iPhone XS and XR have longer battery lives than the iPhone X, with Apple claiming they can last for two days between charges. Apple's new iPhones have been launched and are expensive. What's on the iPhone XS and XR? The iPhone XS and XR
