AutoCAD

User interface The Graphical User Interface (GUI) for AutoCAD is an application that controls the display and design of drawings. It is used to edit drawings, and is similar to the user interface of CorelDraw. AutoCAD's GUI is essentially a 3D version of the interface, although it is not built into the application. AutoCAD is the only Windows application that has a 3D GUI, as it is the only one designed to work with 3D CAD data. Most drawing functions in the GUI are described using commands. Some of the more frequently used commands are available as drop-down menus. The most common commands can be accessed from the main menu, Toolbars, Favorites, and Options. Other commands can be found under the Start tab, in the Help menu, or in Autodesk Application Stores. When CAD drawings are saved, they are often saved in DWG format, which is the native format of AutoCAD. However, many other formats are supported, including: DWF (Windows), PDF (PostScript), TIFF (Tagged Image File Format), DWF with compressed stream (GZip), DXF (AutoCAD Exchange Format), and SVG. AutoCAD is built on its own file format called DWF, which is a vector format. DWF files can be opened and edited in DWF Viewer, which is a free software developed by Primavera Systems. Mac OS X software version 17.2 introduced Text Wrapping for Text Edit (TWE). With it, users of the Mac can now have their text wrap around any widget such as a text field, command line, or column in a datasheet, list, table, or diagram. Types of CAD software In order of market share, the leading CAD software products by revenue are Alias Systems, Dassault Systèmes, Autodesk, Corel, Trimble, Inventive, BIMsoft, Mplus, Benthos, AUC CAD, AEC Software, Elvia Systems and eTracer. Several smaller CAD software vendors have had successful runouts in the past, such as Vectorworks (which was bought by Dassault Systèmes in 2010), and Advanced Polygonal Technologies, but some (for example Catia and NX) remain independent. Today, CAD software is no longer the exclusive domain of the original desktop application

playwright Edward Bond is the latest writer to be honoured with a golden pen at this year's Writers' Guild of Great Britain awards. The 82-year-old was presented with the prize by theatre director Dominic Cooke and his wife, the actress Gillian Shephard, for his creative works during his long career. The British playwright is recognised for his 35 plays, including The Romans and Goliath, and 25 screenplays, including The Killing of Sister George, Spartacus and The Serpent. Bond, who has also won the Gleneagles Writers' Gold Medal and the Somerset Maugham Award, will receive the prize in a ceremony at the Grosvenor House Hotel on Friday. Bond - who still lives in the same house in Isleworth, West London, that he has occupied since 1961 - was called “Britain’s Shakespeare” by Kenneth Tynan and described by Noël Coward as a “genius”. He has also been awarded an honorary doctorate by Kingston University and the University of Surrey. Other winners of the 2008 Writers’

Guild awards include actor Patrick Stewart, for his novel, Heroines, which was also shortlisted for the Carnegie Medal, which recognises the year's best children's novel. He has also been nominated for an Olivier award for his performance as Peter Quince in The Taming of the Shrew. This year
