This image shows asteroid 2014 RP106, which just barely missed Earth on Friday, February 21, 2014. (Image: NASA/JPL-Caltech/UCLA/MPS/DLR/IDA) NASA has released its updated database of Near-Earth Objects (NEOs) - a list of asteroids and comets that are considered a threat to Earth. The Central Bureau for Astronomical Telegrams (CBAT) and the Minor Planet Center (MPC) have revised the database to include objects that do not yet have a confirmed orbit, and five near-Earth objects were confirmed this week. After a new version of the MPC computer software, which is used to perform orbit calculations, was released in July 2015, astronomers were able to verify the predicted orbits of NEOs that escaped their orbit. The software was able to find 85 percent of predicted orbits in the database, which means that most likely-to-be NEOs are now accurately in the database. The CBAT NEO Program currently includes 1,858 asteroids and 220 comets; however, at the close of the month, the MPC is expected to release an updated database, which will include the asteroids and comets which have been confirmed by astronomers and astronomers are expected to identify new NEOs every year. The newly confirmed Near-Earth Asteroids include: 2014 RQ100 (also known as asteroid 2014 RQ100, asteroid 2014 RQ100/Elenin and Comet P/2014 RV3). At Earth, 2014 RQ100 reached a minimum magnitude of 18.6 and will be at its brightest over the next year. 2014 RP106. Asteroid 2014 RP106 was discovered on February 21, 2014. Although its
