The objective of this study was to analyze the natural history of the flatfoot deformity in children and young adults who underwent a flatfoot correction using a flat-foot program based on a simple pragmatic approach. A prospective clinical study was carried out. All patients with flatfoot deformity were enrolled in this study. A flatfoot program was applied, which included a progressive progression in flatfoot correction by combining some biomechanical and physical therapy techniques. At each visit, a physical examination and the Stork Flat Foot Test were performed by trained examiners who did not know the results of the Stork test at other visits. Patients were examined before treatment and at 6, 12, 18, and 24 months and 3 years after the beginning of treatment, and symptoms were scored using a visual analog scale. One hundred and thirty-seven feet in 135 patients were included in this study. All patients were clinically improved at the end of the study. The mean gain in the Stork test score was 10 points, and it was 18 points after 3 years. This improvement was observed in all ranges of the Stork test. The average visual analog score for patients improved from 8.8 to 3.5 at the end of the study. The natural history of flatfoot deformity can be treated using a flatfoot program with a simple pragmatic approach. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION e79caf774b
