* Retouching is a simple, yet powerful, way to improve an image. It involves simplifying the design while retaining the look of the subject. Retouching is the process of correcting or modifying images in which certain defects are corrected. In Photoshop, you have a variety of tools that are available to correct or modify an image, whether it be with a photo editor or with various editing tools that are found in the Effects palettes. If you have the knowledge to use Photoshop with these tools, you can create very high-quality images. * Clipping and masking allow for selective cropping and masking. Clipping is when you restrict an image to a specific area. Using the Clipping Path feature, you can cut out specific areas of an image. You can then mask objects that you want to be left in the image. The end result is a clean area left intact, but the area to the left of the new cut edges has been cropped. * One of the most popular image editing tools, the Blending tool is used for combining the effects of two or more images to create a composited image. The Blending tool is sometimes referred to as "photomerge."

The most notable changes in this version are: All of the changes are discussed in more detail below. Preparing your images The first step in editing images in Elements is to prepare your image. This includes removing anything that is unwanted on your image, such as unwanted objects, blurred backgrounds, and other types of garbage. Do this using the "Filter" menu to choose any or all of the following tools: Deselect (Ctrl + D) Magic Wand (W) Spot Healing Brush (SHIFT + W) Spot Removal (SHIFT + W) Remove Chunk (R) Eraser (E) Invert (Ctrl + I) Smudge (Ctrl + U) Selective Color (S) If you have any clipping issues, you can use the Clipping Mask (Layer menu > Hide > New) in the layers panel to hide a layer. Then you can use Layer > Merge to hide all of the current layers. Editing images Whether you use Elements or Photoshop, there are basically two ways to edit images: Work with the layers Work with the content 05a79cecff

Hydro-electric power systems are proposed for exploiting rivers such as the Amazon River in Brazil, with massive irrigation dams, to supply electric power, in particular to develop the Amazon region economically. Accurate knowledge of environmental and ecological variables and their trends at different river stages and size scales are needed to assess the potential of this environmental system, the vulnerability to climate change and to hydropower developments, and to provide reference data for the development and management of the river and its power systems. We propose an integrated ecohydro-demographic modelling of the river and its power system, focusing on demographic rates and their changing trends within river regions. The primary objective of the modelling is to provide preliminary estimates of the future effects of climate change on: (1) the extent of the river region, (2) human settlement patterns and population density, (3) fishery production, (4) water quality and (5) the potential of river power generation. The model is driven by environmental data on river stages, river discharge, flood frequency, temperature, and the availability of water resources in the river catchment. The model is based on GIS data of flow and stage of the river, and on water resource maps, demography, literature data, and knowledge of river-related natural resources. The model will be calibrated with the available data. The objectives of the project are to map variations of river discharge and river stages in the river basin of the Amazon, to track key demographic indicators at the basin scale, and to perform a preliminary analysis on the potential of hydroelectric power generation and on the vulnerability of the Amazonian river populations to climate change. The American Museum of Natural History in New York is set to embark on a "panda craze" this spring to coincide with the arrival of panda cub Tai Shan. The exhibition includes more than 50 wild and rare panda species that are on the verge of extinction. Panda Cam - which allows people to watch the giant loping, bear-like creatures in their natural habitat from a special webcam - will launch in April and run until December. The exhibition will also feature interactive displays and talks on the panda's biology, evolution and conservation. Lead curator Rachel Swisher said the exhibition was due to run from 28 February through 12 December. More than 10,000 visitors are expected to travel to New York each year, according to the museum's website. "This is a wild animal," Ms Swisher said

Most artists (from Bridget Anderson to Pablo Picasso) have repeated that the most important single thing they do is to create. For many, the pencil is a constant companion, and the pencil mark a harbinger of what's to come. The art of drawing (or sketching) is as old as human language, and it seems to endure. This week, we sat down with one of the biggest names in art instruction, Pete Kramer. In 1998, Pete wrote, directed, and produced the Academy Award-winning, documentary Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain. The film, which explores the right-brain skills and techniques that can dramatically improve drawing skills and allow for the creation of beautiful work, was recently released in DVD and as a 2-part streaming video. In the film, Pete interviewed artists who share their stories of masterful drawing, including a pencil artist
