Our TechSource Agent SDK was built to provide developers with a scalable and highly flexible development environment to integrate enterprise applications into SharePoint 2013. It includes necessary components such as REST APIs, a Task Center, a provisioning console, a task library, diagnostics data, artifacts, etc. There are two components in a SharePoint 2013 on-premises setup: the farm and the web application. Farm components enable developers to connect to the SharePoint 2013 environment by using the REST APIs. The web application provides the front-end framework for applications and web services, while the farm components provide the back-end services in a hosting environment. The Microsoft TechSource (VSTS) Marketplace is one of the products that Microsoft provides to customers to assist them with the provisioning of an enterprise solution. In this particular instance, the TechSource Agent SDK for SharePoint 2013 is an MSI package that can be installed on the SharePoint 2013 server and the agent will automatically start and register itself with the SP Farm. The major feature that we are highlighting in this particular MSDN article, is the ability of the Microsoft TechSource Agent to automatically enable its features according to the needs of the customer. I've been working with Microsoft TechSource, and I believe their VSTS Marketplace's is the best one out there. The SharePoint SDK has really great support for SharePoint. There is also the very nice provisioning experience that they provide, where you can create your own provisioning scripts that would go into a task library and then be reused. To learn more about the TechSource Agent SDK for SharePoint, or to download, use the following URL. I started working on a very interesting project that really allowed me to make me realize the power and benefits that the SharePoint Rest API can offer. This blog post will explain what my project was about and how it can be used. As a fresh SharePoint consultant, my first project was to migrate a couple of sites from SharePoint 2003 to SharePoint 2013. This process was completed successfully, however I have found that using the Web Services for Microsoft SharePoint can be a very pain-less experience. In short, here are my 5 tips to make your REST API development for SharePoint much more enjoyable. 1. Know what you are doing The first advice I have for new SharePoint developers is to be very familiar with the SharePoint 2013 architecture. This step really comes before making any changes on your existing
