apoptosis inducing role of heparin in cultured neural precursor cells. Heparin, one of the major constituents of cerebrospinal fluid and one of the known antithrombotic agents, is one of the best candidates for neurotrophic factors in the central nervous system. We have previously shown that heparin has two different effects on cultured neuronal precursor cells. One is its anti-apoptotic effect, and the other is its stimulatory effect on neuritogenesis. In order to further clarify the anti-apoptotic effect of heparin, the effects of heparin on caspases, the pro-apoptotic intracellular signaling pathway, were examined. The results showed that heparin inhibited caspase-3, 6 and 7 activity stimulated by two different apoptotic inducers. Furthermore, we also found that heparin down regulated the expression level of active caspase-3, which is negatively regulated by anti-apoptotic factor XIAP. These findings suggest that heparin inhibits the apoptotic cell death in neural precursor cells.

"The DPRK side, as a goodwill gesture, will hand over the (Americans') bodies to the United States." "The United States should release us before conducting the joint U.S.-North Korea summit," Kim said, referring to
