The Baltic Sea is one of the most diverse water resources in the world, and is under increasing pressure from population growth and demands for economic development. The report, 'Strategies for the Development of Common Water and Land Resources', addresses this issue by presenting the most recent research and analysing the future demands for common land- and water-based resource and by developing recovery strategies that aim at maintaining and restoring the most valuable Baltic resources.Q: Kinetic|S: set absolute position via code? I am using the following line of code to adjust the top position of a particle via jquery for some reason not all particles are adjusted even though the code is only being run on when the page loads: $('#' + partIDs[i]).css({'top': '800px'}); I can set the top position via the popup tool from KineticJS but not using the above code, Any idea why this may be? A: I assume you are using a Kinetic 'Particle' which has a createAt() method. Use that method and pass in your own position (element.offsetTop or element.offsetTop) Here is some documentation and example from the KineticJS examples: [Edited to add code snippet] This example (from thatcher site above) illustrates the function to set absolute position. $var p1 = new Kinetic.Shape({ x: stage})$
