of 1968, at a party in her North London home, when the author, who was in her 20s, first met the musician, who was in his mid-30s. Today, almost half a century later, she doesn't recall the name of the band. But she does remember the music, still loves the late singer and has at least three friends who claim the couple were married. "I think he was very shy and so we only had a few dates, but I can't remember his name. He was very nice to me, but a bit clumsy. "He was the type who would not learn to dance properly but he did have a twinkle in his eye. I remember him saying he'd been lonely since he lost his father and he was glad to meet someone else for the first time." A few weeks after the party at which Edith met Gerry, the pair were introduced by his friend Roger Waters, the bass player for the classical rock group Pink Floyd. "I don't know if he introduced me to Roger, but we went out together," she says. "I don't think we were officially dating, but I was aware I was going out with a musician and I was a bit of a groupie in those days. "I liked the way he played the guitar, and the way he dressed, he even had bongos in the band. He was a musician in a slightly over-the-top way. "I wasn't mad about music, it was a bit of a comfort to me, but I liked this wild element to it. It was very, very good fun." Edith, who was born in the suburbs of London but had spent her early years in Cyprus and at boarding school, was attracted to the way Gerry talked about life. "He was very interesting," she says. "He wasn't a business man or a rock star. He was just a clever kid and he was full of ideas. He had to keep an eye on the clock. He was always saying to me he's going to be late for something and he didn't want me to come with him. "And he was always very polite. He wasn't snobbish."
