Strange Kids is the band's third studio album, and the first to feature a drummer. Van Deren, himself a former drummer, adds his percussion to the band's aggressive, proggy sound. "His whole concept of drumming changed," Van Deren says. "It's not just about using a metronome to get in a certain tempo or tempo range. It's about having that moment when you're driving the song and you know when you're in that key and you're in that feeling." The band's attitude can be found in the lyrics of "Vietnam." In the first verse, the narrator sings, "I get paid for dying/ To be a little part of all the killing." In the chorus, the band doesn't give a damn about being confused by the world: "Do I believe in an afterlife/ Am I destined for hell/ Oh, yeah, it's one way to travel." By the time of their fourth album, 1994's Deconstruction, Van Deren had moved to a drum machine, and the band was creating their songs at the same time. It's a sound that proves to be more organic and less tuneful than the band's earlier work. It's also more polished. Their songs are less spontaneous, but it's more clear what they're getting at. "In retrospect, I'm really proud of the album," Van Deren says. "The way that we recorded it 2edc1e01e8

Nicotinic acetylcholine receptor alpha 4 subunit is expressed in human CD8+ cytotoxic T lymphocytes, and alpha 4-specific antigen recognition augments T cell cytotoxicity. In humans, CD8+ cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTL) are believed to recognize distinct peptide epitopes, some of which are present in a broad range of virus-infected cells. This recognition is mediated through T cell receptors (TCRs) that recognize antigen in the context of class I or II major histocompatibility complex (MHC) molecules. The role of nicotinic acetylcholine receptors (nAChRs) in the regulation of CTL function is unknown. The presence of nAChRs in human CTL suggests that some of these receptors may be functionally active. We studied the expression of alpha and beta nAChR subunits in human CTL. Northern blot analysis revealed that alpha 4 nAChR subunit mRNA is present in the cytoplasm of human CTL. The alpha 4 protein was detected in a single band of approximately 105 kDa on Western blot analysis of CTL lysates. Messenger RNA for the alpha 4 subunit was detected at the surface of activated CTL, and immunocytochemical studies localized the alpha 4 subunit in the cytoplasm, suggesting that the protein is functional in CTL. Immunocy
