Stetson Fall, Silvia Mader, Margaret Howe. PSYCHOTHERAPY IS WOMEN'S HEALTHQ: Inserting a value into the database I have created a form where the user inserts a value into it. If the value is not already there, the user is prompted to add another value. The value is then inserted into the database. However, if the value is already in the database, I don't want the user to be prompted to enter another value. I have tried to do this by checking if the value is already there and then running the code below. It seems however to be running the if statement even when the value isn't already in the database. however, once this is done, I can't seem to insert the new value into the database. here is the code: //check to see if the textfield is empty if (JTextFieldLogBook.getText().equals("")){ JOptionPane.showMessageDialog(frame, "Please enter a value"); } else{ //insert new text field into database try { int i = 0; String where = "id="+i+""; PreparedStatement prepared
