In my current project I want to get last folder and its date created. import os path = "E:/" dir_list = os.listdir(path) dir_last = dir_list[-1] print(dir_last) But this code returns only the date of "E:/" folder. How can I have the full path of a last folder? A: You need os.path.join(path, dir_list[-1]), not os.listdir. os.listdir returns a list of filenames (e.g. ["first", "second", "third"]), os.path.join returns a path (e.g. "first/second/third") That said, dir_list[-1] is not guaranteed to be a "last" folder. You might want os.path.join(path, dir_list[0]) instead. In any case, if you actually want to get the last-created-folder timestamp, then your path_list should already be in the right format, and just use os.path.getmtime() A: os.path.join(path,dir_list[-1]) os.path.join(path,['first','second', 'third']) This invention relates to a fuel tank of a vehicle. More particularly, the invention relates to a fuel tank that can be installed in various positions, with minimal adjustments, to accommodate a particular vehicle. A fuel

It was emphasized the importance of the inclusion of routine and continuous control of the environmental quality as a decisive element in the making of the investment program of the smelter. In this sense, the control of the air and soil quality is indispensable to the effectiveness of the investment program of the smelter.Q: How to implement a context to plugin - Plugin Development I was wondering how to implement the context variable that can be accessed by the whole application in the plugin. The purpose of this variable is for the application to have a "singleton" access to that variable through the site. I believe this is the most stable way to do it. My question is, what other approaches would you suggest to achieve this goal? And what are the disadvantages/advantages of these approaches? A: I don't think that storing the variable in a plugin is the best approach. Just put the variable in a $SESSION variable. This way it is persistent on the client's browser when it closes. //application.php $variable = 'some_value'; //application_plugin.php session_start(); $SESSION['variable'] = 'some_value'; //controller/action session_start(); $variable = $SESSION['variable']; //whatever There is a lot of talk about the young players in this team, and how that might help them on the road, but its pretty hard to take a road team to the NBA Finals. The experience, maturity, and size that young players bring, is what makes or breaks a team. If the Blazers play well, the Suns will get their shots up, and if the Suns play well, they'll give the Blazers problems. The correct answer is that it will come down
