I want a cheap option that does not take up too much room on my laptop and supports my applications. A local retail store only had the 2GB ones. What is the appropriate size for a card that will fit for a particular segment of applications and do I need anything more than standard formatting (FAT16). I have Windows 7 and Win7 Ultimate. I am not concerned about Mac OS compatibility. A: Try to read the specification of the card you want to buy. SD cards are supposed to have 1GB of capacity and have a maximum transfer rate of around 30MB/s. I don't know why you chose a card with only 2GB and only 4MB/s in capacity and 6MB/s in speed. Card sizes are not related to the speed, it's all about the capacity. The reason I say this, you have chosen a tiny card with very slow speed, and you want to use it for something that is massive compared to it's speed. There are a lot of cards (and other storage devices) that are classified as "SD Cards" that have more than 1GB of capacity. The specification for this kind of cards are usually not that well documented. e79caf774b
