degradation of [14C]
tetracycline in ruminants.
Tetracycline concentrations were determined in the milk, urine and the rumen contents of cows and goats fed at maintenance levels of food intake and in the rumen contents of rhesus monkeys (Macaca mulatta) administered [14C]
tetracycline by the stomach tube at a single dose.
During the observation period (greater than or equal to 48 h) of a single dose [14C] tetracycline administration, the highest concentrations of radioactivity in the milk were found in the early stages, i.e. within 3-5 h after administration. The concentration of tetracycline in the milk

(between 1 and 75 micrograms/ml), urine (up to 71 micrograms/ml) and rumen contents (up to less than 0.6 micrograms/ml) decreased rapidly during this first period and reached about one tenth of the peak concentrations (0.32 micrograms/ml) achieved by d 5-10. The total amount of radioactivity (ng eq
