on the screen of the computer monitor, tablet, or smartphone. The sections and views are organized using the x, y, and z coordinates. Sections and views are created in their own respective frames or tabs, which also contain a sketch that can be the base for a drawing or section. A section contains elements or components. These are the tools and features on the screen that we can interact with. We can change their size, move them, resize them, and rotate them. We can add notes, flags, and crosshairs to these components. In addition, we can use it to link the various components together. This is done with the dialog box and the link options. Section frames and components Another feature of 2D drafting is the use of chits and selectable components. Chits are individual elements on the screen. They are created by clicking on the screen to enter a new drawing area. Components are the parts of the drawing, and they are created by selecting the components from the available components. Components are visible to the designer only in the view that they were selected from. For example, if I select a
