In anesthetized cats, the subcutaneous injection of concentrated carbonated water (CCW), which induces intense stimulation of the subdiaphragmatic vagosympathetic fibers, into the stomach produced an increased activity of the phrenic nerve, a bradycardia, and a pressor response. These responses lasted for several minutes. The injection of CCW into the duodenum did not produce any responses. These findings suggest that the afferent input from the subdiaphragmatic vagosympathetic fibers is important to modulate the sympathetic efferent responses in the cat.Q: Please explain the output when I multiply two ints I recently got into Java and I was trying to understand some code when I found that this: System.out.println c6a93da74d
