To my knowledge, Hjalti started his patch by fixing bugs in the Rama units and the combat logic, and then thought about how to handle projectiles. The most important part of this integration in my eyes is the fact that the Rama collision system now calls back to the main game at object locations on the map. This means that the Rama units get updated at those locations just like in the main game. One is built on the 2.2.5 version of CK3 and uses the updated RD2E scripts as a base for modding. The second branch is built from the master branch and is using the old CK2 RC script (the ones from the 1.1.0 release branch) and a fairly outdated patch to the base scripts. The second branch is quite stable and provides a stable release path for modders to upload their mods using the mod hosts infrastructure. However, the modhosts running this branch are not actively maintained, so it would be a shame if a modder releases a quality mod on this branch, only to have it disappear once the mod host shuts down due to lack of funding. After receiving the new Rama update last year, I had written the only version of Rama that I ever released, after having tried to make my own version of Rama, I realized that doing so was almost impossible without feeling that I was doing something wrong. The new Rama was bringing in a whole new set of problems, mainly with handling global objects in combination with the fact that Rama is very slow for large battles with a lot of objects. A friend of mine, Hjalti Magnusson, sent me a patch for Rama that should solve some of these problems as well as support for custom hitboxes.

Farm Frenzy 2 Update. Release date: 12/23/19. You have a sandbox-mode developer build version: 1.5.2-beta.6-r2253 out now. Save game is created by the sandbox-mode on dev build version. Feature wise the only new thing you can find is that the Dev mode has more capacity for fences. I want to add wider fences with grass, etc. but time is against me. I see that you release an update every month. Maybe it is best if you skip the monthly update and only release a big update once per year (or even longer if things are good). You could even send us a release note with a list of everything that has been added, removed or changed in the past month. 5ec8ef588b
