to sell is human offers a fresh look at the art and science of selling. he reveals the new abcs of moving others (its no longer always be closing), explains why extraverts dont make the best salespeople, and shows how giving people an off-ramp for their actions can matter more than actually changing their minds. the book explores a new approach to selling that is based on the principle that most people who buy don't buy for reasons. instead, they buy because they are sick of being sick. they want to be healthy and they are willing to pay for it. the "sick sell" or "healthy sell" is based on the idea that it is far better to sell a product or service that people love than one they dislike. this is because people have an inbuilt need to do something that gives them happiness and satisfaction. the goal of the "sick sell" is to help people find what they want. the "healthy sell" is an extension of the "sick sell". it takes the already popular "healthy buy" model and adapts it for the selling of solutions that are relatively painless and inexpensive to obtain. the "healthy sell" is about a process of discovering what it is that people need and then helping them to find the best product that meets their needs. the book also contains a list of 12 "sick sell" questions. these questions should be useful in helping salespeople work out what it is that they need and how they can be helped. they are also a good way to develop your own sick sell questions as you find that your customers are not buying because of the products or services they are selling.
