I'm one of those people that just fix it. The problem is that I never make note of the issue and I never remember to update the site with the fix. I fixed the flash problem with my description of some steps needed to remove a flash virus, but there were also a couple other bugs and I've fixed those as well. One is that the Flash Player installer wasn't updating Flash properly. Another is that I didn't update my description of the virus-removal process. I updated it and you should be able to find the updated version here. One final bug that I fixed was when I added the solution to the above instructions that is related to how to get rid of the Flash Player from your system (more on that later). As I said, every once in a while, I end up finding something that's not working right. It's part of the reason why I like making these programs and why I like doing the updates (not always but I like to do them). I've also added the solution to the removal instructions and it should be a bit easier to find (I hope). Thanks to everyone for being patient while I work on my programs and all the other stuff I have going on. I hope this hasn't been too long (I like the longer updates). Every once in a while, I have a question about something that I don't know how to handle or something that I just can't quite figure out. That's why I decided to ask the Net. Today's question comes from a reader of the site and it's about installing the.NET framework. J.C.: I have a friend that won't even let me get his password so I can install.Net on his PC. I can get him to go to the "Microsoft Download Center" page and download the.NET Framework 1.1 but I need him to install it on his own, without
