The above paths are .Evolution of a bloomer mutation in bovine oocyte maturation. Oocyte maturation is an important process in the life cycle of bovine oocytes. Mutation affecting the germinal vesicle migration (GVM) during oocyte maturation may influence the success of in vitro fertilization (IVF) or intracytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI) and the developmental competence of resulting embryos. The possible role of genomic imprinting in the defect of GVM was studied in 462 in vitro matured bovine oocytes collected from 11 cows during postpartum reproductive cycles. The heterozygous oocytes for the GVM phenotype showed a significantly lower rate of GVM and this phenotype is genetically linked to the expression of the growth hormone receptor gene (GHR) and type 1 insulin-like growth factor receptor gene (IGF1R) on bovine chromosome 16.
